The Fox and the Grapes

A Fox, hungry after a long and futile chase, came across a vine heavy with ripe grapes. He made several attempts to reach them, but they were just beyond his reach. Finally, in frustration, he turned away, saying, "I do not care for them anyway; they are probably sour."

Moral: This fable teaches us that it is easy to disparage things that we cannot have, rather than admitting our own limitations.

The Ant and the Grasshopper

An Ant was busy gathering food for the winter, while a Grasshopper hopped around, singing and playing. When winter came, the Grasshopper was starving, while the Ant had plenty of food. The Grasshopper begged the Ant for help, but the Ant refused, saying, "Why didn't you work in the summer?"
