One popular theory suggests that Lady Greensleeves was a courtesan or mistress to King Henry VIII. This theory is based on the fact that the ballad "Greensleeves" was first published in 1580, shortly after Henry's death. The lyrics of the song seem to hint at a clandestine relationship between a woman and a powerful man.

However, there is no concrete evidence to support this theory. It is equally possible that Lady Greensleeves was a fictional character created by a songwriter to capture the hearts of the common people.
