The Concept: A Limbo for Tarnished Agents

Slough House is a dilapidated building located in a dreary corner of London, a far cry from the glamour and excitement often associated with espionage. Here, fallen spies, known as "slow horses," are assigned to mundane tasks, their careers and reputations in tatters. They are overseen by Jackson Lamb, a gruff and unconventional boss who seems to have lost his own spark long ago.

These slow horses have made mistakes, been compromised, or simply fallen out of favor with their superiors. Some are bitter and disillusioned, convinced that they have been unjustly cast aside. Others cling to the hope of redemption, yearning for a chance to prove their worth once more.

- Min Harper: A quiet and unassuming woman, Min has a photographic memory and an knack for uncovering hidden connections. Her ability to piece together seemingly unrelated pieces of information makes her an invaluable asset to the slow horses.
