When she wishes for a new doll, she immediately thinks of her poor friend Lucy, who has never had a doll of her own. When she wishes for a new dress, she thinks of her mother, who has been working hard to make ends meet. And when she wishes for a new home, she thinks of all the homeless people who have nowhere to go.

The fishbone grants Alice's wishes, but it also teaches her a valuable lesson about the importance of being careful what you wish for. When Alice wishes for a new doll, she gets a beautiful doll, but it is so perfect that she is afraid to play with it. When she wishes for a new dress, she gets a beautiful dress, but it is so fine that she is afraid to wear it. And when she wishes for a new home, she gets a beautiful home, but it is so large that she feels lost and alone.

Alice eventually learns that the best things in life are not always the things that you wish for. The best things in life are the things that you work for and earn. And the best things in life are the things that you share with others.
