Lila is a young woman from the North who has always believed in the abolition of slavery. When the war breaks out, she volunteers to work as a nurse in a Union hospital. There, she meets Sarah, a young woman from the South who has always believed in the Confederacy. Despite their different backgrounds, Lila and Sarah form an unlikely friendship.

As the war rages on, Lila and Sarah are forced to confront their own prejudices and beliefs. Lila begins to question her faith in the Union as she sees the horrors of war firsthand. Sarah begins to question her faith in the Confederacy as she sees the suffering of the slaves.

Despite the challenges they face, Lila and Sarah find strength in their friendship. They learn to respect each other's differences and to work together for a common goal. In the end, they both come to realize that the bonds of friendship are stronger than the bonds of war.
